THE MONEY WORK

a powerful 2-day seminar to help people research & discover aspects of their personal and organizational relationship to money

Facilitated by Peter KOENIG

Brussels, Friday 27th & Saturday 28th of February 2015

Money is a human creation. Through understanding the personal meaning that money holds for us, we become free to use it constructively and are less driven by the limiting and unhealthy compulsions around the place of money in our lives. In the Money work seminar we discover parts of our inner selves that are often extremely well hidden. In reclaiming these unconscious parts we become more whole and free. The benefits flow into our financial, professional and relational lives.

Most people attend a money workshop with the overt or covert hope that they will somehow learn to acquire more money. The goal of this workshop however is different: this seminar is intended to help participants research and discover aspects of their personal and organizational relationship to money in a depth they may not yet have encountered — and then to make adjustments as they find appropriate. The adjustments have to do with bringing the way they relate and handle money into line with where they are on their life path. As each person has a different life path, the approach is precise and specific to each, even if the financial situations of different people often appear similar.

In the end some people may find themselves making more money, others less, others again the same amount. The quantity however becomes less important, the focus is on invoking knowledge which will eventually increase a person's satisfaction independent of the quantities; and also on increasing competence to live with a larger variety of financial situations with greater ease and relaxation. Similar or parallel to the way individuals relate to money is the way in which organizations and society as a whole relate to it; and there is an intricate web of interaction between actions at these different levels.

what we cover

The 2-day Money work seminar helps you research and discover aspects of your relationship with money in a depth you may not have encountered. This highly participative workshop invites you to:

- Explore with curiosity and honesty your own assumptions about money and their roots in your history
- Recognize the reality you have created in various aspects of your financial life and in the world
- Create a mindset that allows you to experience freedom in your relationship with money
- Learn a system that will enable you to work differently with money

how we work

The Money work seminar can be deep and powerful work in which we explore often unrevealed parts of our inner selves through a process called reclamation. We follow individual and group needs as they emerge, based on the practices of dialogue and enquiry. We create a safe and encouraging space for people to openly explore and share their experiences with money.

"Money is a key part of our lives - the function of our society depends upon it.

Some of us learn the skills of how to manage our money, yet few of us have the opportunity to fully explore our relationship with it.

Without a mature and healthy relationship with money, we limit our ability to freely give, hold and receive."

who is this workshop designed for? For all those with questions like

- "I never have enough money" Uncertainty where and how to invest
- Conflict on inheritance To learn about the nature and creation of money Unease with having money Inability to spend Dissatisfied with contradictory, erratic behavior with money "How do I bring together doing what I love and making a living?" To learn 'guilt-free abundance' Unable to save Discriminated against for being rich To learn about developments in the world of mainstream and alternative financing Starting my own business ... but on the right foot

the workshop leader - Peter Koenig

Peter has studied the phenomenology of money since the early 1980s, giving presentations and performing original research with small groups. Following an MBA in Geneva, Peter ran a business providing management training, leadership and strategic development processes for companies.

The stimulus for his monetary research began through observing the arbitrary effects of financial tools used in the context of these activities. In 1987 he became an independent financial and organizational consultant to companies and non-profit organizations. In 1994 he launched his first public Money Seminar and in 1999 initiated a new international conference series on Money & Business Partnership.
